But almost every man who sometimes goes to the post office to get a first-class ticket, he picked up fragments of these pictures of paper which the manufacturers of good coins made on the end of every spool, and which read "WARRANTED TO HOLD OUT TWO CENTS VALUE."

Such a sign on such a man was up to speed the gratuity of any company.

CHARLES IN.—Dr. Thompson of the road hotel at Alliance, Ok., conceived for his eccentricity. The other travellers stopped up to eat, while the doctor was at the bar.

"Well, we charge it," he declared, "you push down, it's fifty cents."
"Charge it," then, said the fellow,
and stepped off into the corridor.
The doctor, half angry and half amused, followed the chap and asked him to sit down. "What's the trouble?"
"I intend to pay," that Noble told him.
"Certainly not," was the plain reply. "I tell you to charge it!"
The doctor was completely at a loss
with the best of his brains.
"Stranger, if ever you see him, let me hear from you again, just bring your best to me."

is Memphis, Tennessee, the countryman stood gazing in those windows, where two skeletons had perched—one being that of a man, the other a boy. A stranger coming of those skeletons is that?" asked the countryman, pointing to the larger one.
"That is Shakespeare's," said the other.
"And whose is that?" continued the countryman, pointing to the smaller one.
"That is Shakespeare's too," said the wig.
"How can it be?"
"Why, that's him when he was a wee little child."
